FEBRUARY 2019 NEWSLETTER

Dear Patron,

In my ongoing attempt to be a better library director, I am currently taking a class on digital imaging. Unlike a traditional class, this class does not have a set list of things I must learn. Rather, it offers some textbook articles to read each week, and from there, I am to choose the two topics about which I know the least and research those topics. First of all, let me say that I know almost nothing about digital imaging, so the list of possible topics is almost endless! Secondly, while the structure of this class is a bit intimidating (it is so wide open!), the teacher in me says that this is an excellent way to get students to "own" their education and not just do whatever is necessary to get an "A".

Education within the public library, often referred to as the "people's university", works in much the same way. Find a topic that interests you, and begin learning. Look for books and magazines on the local library's shelves, seek information from other libraries through inter-library loan, or access online databases provided through the state library. Whatever you do, don't let the fact that a teacher is not there holding a grade over your head stop you from learning what you want to know. Self-motivated learners always learn more than students who are force-fed information. Find out what you don't know and begin learning today!
